75 State Counties Should Be Merged in 25, Says Judge

R. A. Cook Advocates County-Municipal Unit for Pulaski

WARNS OF LOBBIES

Sheriffs and Judges Organized for Officeholders' Interests

LITTLE ROCK.—Declaring that the cost of local government has become oppressive, County Judge R. A. Cook, in an address before the Little Rock Real Estate Board at the Hotel Ben McGehee Thursday, advocated county mergers and substitution of a single government for Little Rock, North Little Rock and Pulaski county, as a means of reducing governmental costs and obtaining greater efficiency.

He said the number of counties in Arkansas should be reduced from 75 to 25, or fewer, but added that the prospect of carrying out such mergers appears remote because of the strong lobby of county judges, sheriffs and other officials opposing any reduction in the number of public offices, or in the remuneration paid such officials.

Save Administrative Cost
"One man should be at the head of a single government having jurisdiction over Pulaski county and Greater Little Rock," Judge Cook said. "Instead of a single government, we have a county judge and two mayors and many other duplicating public services."

"It appears to be rather an impossible task to consolidate the county and city government, or to reduce the number of counties at present, but such mergers must be made sooner or later, if the taxpayers are to obtain permanent relief from oppressive levies for local government."

Officials Well Organized
"A good reason why county mergers cannot be made now is because the county judges and sheriffs have organized to protect their personal interests—their jobs—rather than to obtain better and cheaper government for the people."

"Reduction of the number of counties to 25 would mean that about 50 county judges, 50 sheriffs and several hundred other county officials and employees would not be needed. So long as county officials have strong organizations lobbying at each session of the legislature for selfish purposes, we will have as many counties as ever."

Although he is a member of the County Judges Association, Judge Cook said he would favor introduction of a bill, or submission of a constitutional amendment, to reduce the number of counties and to modernize the state's form of local government.

'Long' Name-Plate Torn From Bridge

Huey Says He Will Replace It With 'Indestructible' Sign

SHREVEPORT, La.—(AP)—Huge wooden signs on the new Red river bridge here, torn down last Wednesday night by an unidentified band of about 25 men, will be replaced at once by steel ones riveted to the bridge. Senator Huey P. Long informed Public Safety Commissioner T. Dawkins in a telephone conversation Thursday.

Commissioner Dawkins said he had talked with Senator Long and that Long had promised new "practically indestructible" signs.

The question "Who yanked the names of Huey P. Long and O. K. Allen off the Red river bridge?" took its place beside the mystery of who socked the senator on Long Island.

"The bridge incident was termed 'an unsolved mystery' Thursday morning when charges of malicious mischief lodged against 16 residents of Caddo and Bossier parishes were dismissed for lack of evidence.

"The 16 had been arrested last night after a considerable group of men swarmed on the bridge and tore down signs at both ends, measuring 40 by 10 feet, which announced to the world that the structure was a product of the gubernatorial administration of 'Huey P. Long and O. K. Allen' and that it was to be called 'The Long-Allen bridge.'"

Ford Reported as Agreeing to Union

NRA Understands Auto Magnate Has Agreed to Bargaining

DETROIT.—(AP)—Collective bargaining, salient feature of the NRA concerning which the holdout Ford Motor Company until recently had maintained silence, Thursday night stood as an accepted provision by Henry Ford, both in administration headquarters at Washington and at the manufacturer's Dearborn office.

The statement of Senator Robert F. Wagner, chairman of the National Labor Board, that he interpreted a pronouncement of the Ford company in regard to a strike in its Edgewater, N. J. plant as complying with the NRA's collective bargaining provisions, lent emphasis to recent remarks of Ford officials, who stated the company always has been willing to bargain collectively.

Lawrence Wilson Charges Dropped

6 Remaining Indictments Dismissed After First Jury Trial

CAMDEN, Ark.—Six remaining embezzlement indictments against former Lieut. Gov. Lawrence E. Wilson and the two embezzlement charges against Mrs. Fannie D. Simmons, former city treasurer, were dismissed by Prosecuting Attorney Alvin D. Stevens at the concluding session of Circuit Court here Thursday.

Prosecutor Stevens said: "After the jury acquitted Lawrence E. Wilson on one of the strongest cases I had against him, I feel it would be useless to hold the other cases on the docket because I believe it would be impossible to secure a conviction. It would be needless expenditure of money to attempt to try the other cases, therefore I believe it my duty to dismiss these cases."

Refunding Board Drops 5 Employees

Monthly Pay Roll of $1,625 Is Slashed Friday by $725

By Boyden Underwood
United Press Staff Correspondent
LITTLE ROCK.—(UP)—In August, United Press carried a story showing an expenditure of $5,400 in salaries to employees of the Bond Refunding Board.

It pointed out that although the nine employees, recently increased to 11, had been hired since April, the bonds which were to be exchanged for the old ones had not even been delivered from the printer until August 1, and that little work had been accomplished up to that time.

The story went on to quote the supervisor of the department as saying in effect that perhaps fewer employees could have done the work.

Now on Friday, we find that the State Debt board, composed of Gov. J. M. Furell, State Treasurer Roy V. Leonard and Comptroller Griffin Smith, passed a resolution reducing the staff of the refunding department from 11 to six including the supervisor.

The 11 drew a total salary of $1,625 monthly.

Those who were dismissed Friday were: James Guy Tucker, former supervisor; W. H. Childers, Jr., Elmer Smith, Don Greenhaw, and Mildred Lee. By the cut in personnel $725 monthly is saved.

Most folks are under the impression that all bonds were to be given in exchange for the $146,000,000 of Arkansas highway obligations, were printed at a tremendous cost to the state. And that now, in view of the bond situation and the outlook for the passage of a new refunding bill, these newly printed bonds will have to be thrown away and the initial cost chalked up as waste.

Frightened watchdogs of the state's purse strings foresaw a possibility of the Ellis bill's failure; ordered only a portion or 7,500 bonds printed; they cost $431.54, instead of the thousands of dollars it would have cost the state had the entire issue been printed.

Consequently, the loss to the taxpayer is small when a new bill is substituted for the Ellis measure.

On the bench in Federal court here three judges sat to hear the plea of bondholders who asked a permanent injunction against Arkansas' state treasurer to restrain him from paying out highway funds.

One of the judges was John E. Martineau, former governor of Arkansas. The road law under which the highway bonds were issued and the revenues from the highway department pledged for payment of interest bore his name—the Martineau Road Law.

Chief attorney for the treasurer was Charles T. Coleman, who in 1926 drafted the Road Law and handed it to Martineau, told him to make his campaign on it, which in effect was the extensive highway program Arkansas entered into after Martineau's election.

It was a treat to see Coleman defend the case; still not knock the law he had written. It was a study of a "poker face" to watch that of Judge Martineau on the bench as he listened to arguments on "his law."

Incidentally, the injunction was continued and it is believed it will be made days before a final decision is made by the court. Most believe a permanent injunction will be granted; that the case will end in the United States Supreme Court.

U. S. Relief Orders Made Negotiable Like Bank Checks

J. R. Henry Cautions, However, That Beneficiary Must Sign Triplicate

CAUTION TO STORES

Signature Must Be Followed by Endorsement for Each Transfer

Under a new accounting system installed November 1 the federal disbursing orders issued in Hempstead county for work relief, direct relief and other purposes, become negotiable instruments and are subject to transfer from one person to another on the same basis as bank checks, it was announced Friday by J. R. Henry, relief officer for Hempstead county.

At the same time Mr. Henry issued a warning that all disbursing orders must be signed by the beneficiary, in triplicate. Properly signed by the person to whom cash or goods are delivered, the order become negotiable—but without the beneficiary's signature it will be rejected by the disbursing officer, he said. This fact is called to the attention of local merchants, through whose hands many of the orders will pass, and they are asked to take particular pains to see that the beneficiary signs.

For Cash and Goods
The disbursing orders are given for four purposes: Work relief, direct relief, administrative expense, and transient cases. The work relief and administrative orders are usually for cash, while the direct and transient relief orders are chiefly for commodities.

Mr. Henry's statement to The Star follows:

"Effective November 1 the State Emergency Relief Commission adopted and is putting into operation in all counties a new accounting system whereby the disbursing orders issued by the county social worker become negotiable instruments and are subject to transfer from party to party on the same basis as a bank check."

"In this connection I wish to point out that an accurate record of the face amount of all disbursing orders issued by the county social worker is made at the time of issuance, even to securing the signature of the beneficiary on a duplicate copy of the order, which signature would be carefully checked against the original order when presented to the county office for payment."

Beneficiary Must Sign
"And I wish to caution all persons handling disbursing orders in the course of their business dealings to be sure and see that the disbursing order is properly signed by the beneficiary in the space provided on the face of the order for signature, and that the order is endorsed on the back by all subsequent handlers guaranteeing all prior endorsements."

"Disbursing orders are redeemable on demand at any time if presented properly endorsed to the disbursing officer at the county relief office in the Hope city hall."

This Tower Takes Electricity Out Of the Wind

The practicability of developing electricity from wind power was demonstrated at Burlington, N. J., when a cylindrical metal tower, set spinning top-like at a speed of 60 miles an hour, showed its force by exerting a pull of 8,000 pounds. The tower (pictured during the first demonstration), is 90 feet tall, 28 feet broad and has a potential power five or six times greater than that of the wind. Inventor Julius D. Madaras is shown below operating the motor which gives the rotor the initial start. He got the idea from studying the spin of a rifle bullet.

Waldo on Local Field 7:30 Friday

Game Expected to Point Cats for Annual Contest With Prescott

Coach Teddy Jones put his Bobcat football team through the finishing touches Thursday afternoon for the game here Friday night against Waldo High School.

A change in the lineup may keep Drake and Houston, regular tackles, out of most of the game. Both have minor injuries, and Coach Jones doesn't want to gamble, fearing that further injuries might put the players out of commission for the Prescott game next week.

Jack Turner, regular halfback, may find himself sitting on the bench during the greater part of the game. Turner was injured at Hot Springs, leaving the game with a bad knee.

With the prize battle of the year coming up next week against the Prescott Curly Wolves, Coach Jones is guarding against having his players crippled. The one school the Bobcats desire to beat more than any other in the state is Prescott. For that game Coach Jones is saving everything.

This season the Bobcats are stronger than in recent years. The game will be played at Prescott. The Wolves appear to be weaker with only a few backfield. It will be a hard game for both squads, with the Bobcats a slight favorite.

Coach Jones' objective in Friday night's game will be to get a comfortable lead, if possible, and then jerk out most of his regulars.

The opening kick-off is scheduled at 7:30 o'clock.

No student tickets will be sold after school closes Friday afternoon. All tickets at the football field will be sold for adult admissions.

Report of Outlaw on No. 67 Leads to Injury of Women

Nevada Co. Officers Fire on Car Just West of Prescott

FLED GAS STATION

Stranger Resembling Floyd Leaves Emmet Depot Hurriedly

A report that Charles (Pretty Boy) Floyd, Oklahoma outlaw, was speeding east from Emmet on highway No. 67 Thursday night led Nevada county officers to fire accidentally upon two Louisville (Ky.) women at the outskirts of Prescott, putting the women in Cora Donnell hospital with painful but not serious cuts from flying glass.

The women, Mrs. Joseph Kissler and her daughter Mary, were returning home to Kentucky when near the west approach to Prescott they encountered an ambush of Nevada county officers.

Women Drive On
Thinking it was a holdup, the women sped through the blockade and the officers opened fire, smashing the car's windshield and windows. The women continued into Prescott and went to the hospital for treatment. They were reported resting comfortably there Friday.

Nevada officers said Proprietor Bleu of a filling station just east of Emmet had telephoned them about 7 o'clock Thursday night that a man and a woman drove into his depot and got 10 gallons of gas.

Bleu told officers the man got out of the car and looked around. Bleu thought he looked like "Pretty Boy" Floyd. He resembled photographs and was stockily built.

Stranger Leaves in Hurry
The man got suspicious, Bleu said, and scrambling into the car drove off toward Prescott without paying for the gasoline, and in such a hurry he forgot to replace the cap on his tank.

Bleu immediately telephoned the sheriff's office at Prescott, giving a detailed description of the car.

The ambush got the wrong car, however.

Sheriff Arlice Pittman told The Star Friday:

"The women's car tallied with the description given us. We threw a light on them and gave the order to stop. They ran past us and we opened fire. Fortunately they were not seriously hurt. No bullets struck them, but they were cut by broken pieces of glass. We regret the mistake."

Language Still Is a World Problem

E. F. McFaddin Tells Rotary of 8 Languages at Chicago Meet

Indicative of some of the problems confronting anyone who deals in international affairs, E. F. McFaddin told Hope Rotary club Friday night at Hotel Barlow that the International Aims & Objects Committee meeting which he attended in Chicago three days this week was forced to deal with the complexities of eight languages.

The problem before the general committee, said Mr. McFaddin, who is a member of the International Club Service Committee, was the revising of Rotary's famous "Six Objects"—the organization's "Bible."

"In order to find out all the shades of meaning that a single English word might have when translated into a foreign tongue," he said, "we followed this practice:

"As soon as a new draft of the Objects was completed we would have a Japanese Rotation. Then we would translate it into Japanese, for instance, secure a Japanese speaking only street-Japanese, and who knew nothing whatever about Rotary, and ask him to translate the Japanese code back into such English as he knew."

"We wanted to see what happened to ideas rather than words—and only then did we realize how hard it is to choose a few simple words which could not be misunderstood in any language, regardless of the number of translations."

Mr. McFaddin left Hope last Saturday, spending Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday in Chicago on Rotary international duties.

The speaker also introduced to the club its newest member, Albert Graves, of the law firm of Graves & Graves, who responded briefly.

Program dates were announced for balance of the year as follows: November 10, Nick Jewell; November 17, Trevell Cornwell; November 24, L. Carter Johnson; December 1, Herbert Morley; December 8, open; December 15, Frank Stanley; December 22, Albert Graves; December 29, Frank Ward.

Nevada has a total population of 91,058 or .08 person to the square mile. The railway that runs beneath London, a distance of 6 1/2 miles, and conveys letters and parcels between Whitechapel and Paddington, gives a service of about 850 journeys a day, at an average of 20 miles an hour.

Grant and Thackrey Tell of Labor's Position Under NRA

One hundred and fifty men representing labor and employers of labor heard two State Federation of Labor representatives speak Thursday night at Hope city hall.

The speakers, President Grant and Secretary Thackrey, of the state federation, brought an account of labor's position under the National Recovery Administration. Mr. Grant and Mr. Thackrey attended the recent convention of the American Federation of Labor at Washington.

BEHIND THE SCENES IN Washington

Roosevelt Has Endless Stock of Tricks to Pull Out of His Hat... Johnson Talks of Quitting, but Stays... Hoarders Turn to Gens... Ford Is Given Taste of NRA Discipline.

BY RODNEY DUTCHER
NEA Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON.—This period doubtless will be known to history, as the era of planless planning.

There's no longer any doubt as to the main objectives of the Roosevelt program. What confuses nearly everyone is the amazing versatility and resiliency of the president as he pulls one scheme after another from his hat in the effort to get there.

No one doubts the inexhaustibility of the contents of the Roosevelt hat. Scores of methods remain to be tried and some of the most drastic, insiders know, will be used before the recovery program is allowed to collapse.

Roosevelt is shaping up as the master opportunist of all time, but the flexibility and experimental nature of his attack on depression has some serious disadvantages—which his advisers admit—as well as his obvious advantages. One is the uncertainty which continues to beset business men, creditors, and investors. For them life has become a daily guessing game—what happens next and what are the effects?

Latest movements, designed for both psychological and practical results, include gold purchase, Russian recognition, cotton and wheat loans, bank deposit liquidation, and purchase of surplus foods for relief.

The objectives—don't forget—are full employment and farmer rehabilitation, raising of commodity prices to the 1926 level and consequent debtor relief and then dollar stabilization.

For your information, Roosevelt is keenly and pleasantly aware that the uncertainty as to his immediate methods, as well as assurance of his long range objective, discourages short selling on stock and commodity markets.

Johnson Quits—But Stays

A messenger boy found Gen. Hugh Johnson lying flat on his office floor, peering under a rug and trying to connect wires for a new buzzer in the room outside. It seemed that the noise of the old bell had been bothering a girl secretary with whose desk it was connected.

Johnson said last August that he would retire as NRA administrator only "after I give my accounting to Congress." That still stands, though it isn't certain that he will quit this winter.

More than once, however, he informally has offered his resignation to Roosevelt after matters were taken out of his hands.

Hoarders Turn to Gens

Diamond imports from Amsterdam to this country have been increasing steadily all year. It is assumed that some hoarders, unable to hide gold, have turned to precious stones.

Ford Is Disciplined

Henry Ford, denied a market with the government, is being punished not for violation of the NRA automobile code, but for his recalcitrant attitude toward the Blue Eagle.

Johnson, with the support of President Roosevelt, wants to make an example of a big fellow who has "trifled with the bird." Ford's refusal to sign the code—which isn't demanded by the law—and what formerly was regarded as his defiance of NRA, had an unfortunate psychological effect on the NRA program and encouraged other big business men to stiffen their backs against "government interference."

Ford hasn't violated the code and apparently doesn't intend to.

Private advisers from Detroit, following Johnson's latest threats at Ford, are that Henry at once began to plan a retaliatory move against Johnson himself.

YOUR CHILDREN

By Olive Roberts Barton
©1933 BY NEA SERVICE, INC.

What are "animal spirits"? Nothing more than the forces set to work by the mind to develop itself. The mind is there in the child, blank, we'll say, in the beginning, but with every latent power to teach itself.

We don't teach children. They teach themselves. We don't teach a child to sit, to climb, to walk, to gurgle and eventually talk. He teaches himself.

He is a go-getter and by the effort of his own mind to improve itself, he learns. He cannot develop his body without adding certain things to his mind. But it is the mind that dictates this physical activity.

A brain is curious. It must know things. It says to the body, "Climb that tree. I want to know what is on top. Touch that stone. I must know how it feels. Eat that green apple. I have to know how it tastes."

Working of Child's Brain

A brain is willful. It has to develop a power of its own and to do so it has to set up its stubborn strength against other and older minds. It dictates to the small boy, "Don't do that when you are told. I must be strong and unless I get exercise I cannot be the steel man I should be when I grow up. When you are told to walk quietly, stamp. When you are told not to put beans up your nose, do it. When you are told not to waken the baby, shout as loudly as you can. Nothing else matters but that I become a good strong mind with a strong will of my own."

It is imaginative, too, and goes to any length to develop its fancy. It whispers to the little girl in school, "Don't sit still any longer. I want to imagine what it would be like to squirm and whisper and creek. I must prefer that to lessons."

The mind is a tyrant and a dictator. It is insatiable in its own development. It uses the strong little body for its own ends. What does it care about our rules and regulations for behavior? Nothing.

Search for New Experiences

Furthermore the mind is endlessly selfish. Every minute is in seeking its own gain. It demands expansion and does expand as relentlessly as a snowdrop in February that amazes the world by pushing its frail white head through a cake of ice. There is a force here, unseen, the force of growth that would put our vastest machinery to shame.

The force that pushes the snowdrop can be likened to the mind force that pushes the small body. The body is endlessly active. It gets into everything, tries everything at least once, because behind it the mind is cracking the whip. It whispers, "Go and try it and learn. School doesn't matter to me today. I am starving for something different. I am not interested in spelling. I would rather know at the moment what color robins' eggs are or what it is like to go on Jim's bobsled as he promised."

Greedy for new sensation, new power, new knowledge, new visions, all young brains are Legrees. Knowing this, I think we may look upon the superlative, restless, hard-to-rule child with more patient eyes. He is slave to one task master, his own mind. To make a friend of that mind and to co-operate with it, instead of insistently balking it, would be our wisest course.

Interest is the key. An interested brain is an ally we should not overlook. A continually thwarted mind goes its own way.

The federal penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kan., has the largest development of the farm colony idea for prisoners.

Believing Bob to be lost to her, she becomes engaged to a wealthy man. But she is in the clutches of a fortune hunter who is after her. Joan is living there as Mrs. Blake. He finds Joan from Mrs. Blake and learns that she loves him.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XXXII

MORE than one driver cursed Bob Weston freely, as he swung the gray roadster in and out of traffic. Miraculously, through some mechanical agility that had nothing whatever to do with conscious effort, Bob avoided each impending collision.

Now he knew that, despite doubts and disappointments, he had always seen Joan apart from other women. Not to find that she was common clay after all, pitifully trail and human!

She was wearing a mask, exploited and glorified like some cheap, intriguing show girl. Some could be but one interpretation of Joan's presence in that luxurious apartment. She was living there as Mrs. Barney Blake.

Bob assured himself that he would put her out of his life now, utterly and completely. From now on he and Joan would go their separate ways.

But he could not forget the way she had responded to his kisses, the way she had whispered, "Do you love me, Bob?" What could it mean except that she was willing to cheat this other man who had taken her so far along her ambitious way?

Bob let himself into the great hall of his home and mounted the stairs. A light was burning in his father's room and the door was slightly ajar. "That you, Bob?" his father called.

"Yes, sir."

The older man was propped up in bed, pillows behind his back and a book in his hand.

"Sorry I dashed in such a hurry, Dad," Bob said.

"It was rather hard on Barbara. I suppose you had a reason, though."

"I did. Or thought I did. Nothing in the world seemed quite so important."

The older man waited. Then Bob went on, "The masked singer was Joan Warring, Dad."

"Joan Warring?"

"Don't you remember—the girl you warned me against in Memphis?"

"Yes, I remember," his father said, shocked by the despair on his son's face. "Perhaps I was wrong, Bob. She is very beautiful and she has a lovely voice. Perhaps I was too hasty in my judgment."

TOO hasty! Bob could have laughed. Instead he looked steadily at his father, without answering.

swearing. The bitterness in his eyes was plain.

"Well, there's Barbara," his father said, his voice unusually gentle. He was thinking that he would have given a great deal to spare his tall, handsome son the pain of disillusionment. "She's a fine girl."

"Yes, Barbara's all right," Bob said without enthusiasm. After a moment he added, "It would please you if I married her, wouldn't it, Dad?"

"I'd like to see you happy and settled. Young people are like colts, Bob. Part breeding, part being put through their paces early. Barbara comes from a good family and she's had the right training."

"I suppose that counts," Bob said wearily. He added, "Well, you win, Dad. Just give me a little time, won't you?"

"Of course. I've been thinking I'd like a little trip somewhere. Perhaps a cruise to Havana. I was looking over the yacht yesterday and it's ready to sail on an hour's notice. How about coming with me?"

"Glad to! When can we leave?"

"Tomorrow afternoon. Does that suit you?"

"Perfectly. And — thanks, Dad."

His father was watching him keenly. "I didn't know this affair with—Joan had gone so far," he said. "If I had, I might not have been so ready with advice."

"Don't worry," Bob told him. "I'll be all right!" He went on to his room, thinking indelibly how obvious had been his father's efforts to make things easier for him. Pretending he had planned this cruise for some time! Well, there was no way to get beyond parental devotion. And his father was one in a million.

After he was alone again Mr. Weston reached for the telephone beside his bed and called a number.

FRIDAY morning came.

It proved to be the strangest, most unaccountable day in all Joan's 20 years. And she was sure, being honest with herself, that it was to be one of the happiest days she had known, too.

She felt free. No more compulsion, no more doing this and that under the gricks of conscience. She had never been more light hearted than she was as she packed the pretty clothes bought for herself into Pat's steamer trunk.

"Joan, you're sure you don't mind?" Pat demanded in one of her impetuous rushes across the room.

It was hard for her to realize what had happened, hard for her to believe that Joan actually didn't want to marry Barney, just as Barney did not want to marry Joan.

Then there was the matter of persuading Mrs. Blake, who had heard the explanation in conversation, that this was not mere caprice or the result of misunderstanding. It was even harder to convince Barney's stepmother, that of all three young people, none were happier over the outcome than Joan.

"You see, Mrs. Blake, Joan loves another man," Pat explained.

But this other man had little substance. He was almost a myth in the light of Mrs. Blake's practical reasoning. If Joan loved him so much why wasn't he there?

Barney and Pat were married just before noon. They did not write Mrs. Warring. Joan had promised to write her mother as soon as the steamer sailed, to write voluminously and explain everything. A wire would only have left Mrs. Warring confused and troubled.

They had luncheon at a flower-decked table in the corner of a hotel dining room. Those around them had only to look at Barney and Pat to know that this was a gala affair.

There were nearly two hours before sailing time and Barney suggested a drive. They passed the New York Yacht Club basin with its jumble of sea craft. Pat's gaze was caught by a group of young people about to board a private yacht. She called Barney's attention to the gay group and with his attention diverted, they almost collided with a long black limousine, shooting past. There were two men in the back seat of the black car.

If they had stopped a moment they would have seen the men—a tall, blond young fellow and a gray-haired man—Joan the crowd boarding the yacht. But Joan was talking to Mrs. Blake and Pat's eyes were only for Barney.

A little later Joan and Mrs. Blake stood on the pier in the milling crowd. Everywhere there were happy, excited voices, the flurry of departure. Goodbys were being said, baggage carried aboard.

Barney and Pat stood at the rail of the big liner, looking down on Joan and Mrs. Blake.

"Goodbye. We'll write," Barney promised.

"You know you won't!" Mrs. Blake chided, smiling.

"Then we'll cable."

"Happy voyage!" called Joan.

And then Barney was waving and the fluttering of Pat's handkerchiefs joined hundreds of others. Slowly the little tug boats eased the liner out into mid-stream. Slowly the liner turned, heading toward the sea.

"We'll be lonely," Mrs. Blake said.

"We'll miss them," Joan replied, guiding Barney's car through the thick traffic. She was thinking that she wouldn't be lonely. Never again! Perhaps even now a telephone call from Bob was waiting for her at the apartment.

The afternoon newspapers would be sure to have a story about Pat's and Barney's marriage. Bob would see it. Anyway, by now he must have reasoned things out and realized that there was no cause for his foolish jealousy.

But no call was waiting for Joan when she arrived. She refused to allow that to depress her. She filled the afternoon with attempts at reading, wrote a long letter to her mother, and busied herself about the apartment.

When darkness came she went into the living room, bright with flowers. She turned on two of the shaded wall lights and they bathed the room in a mellow glow. She rearranged flowers in a tall silver vase.

The room had an expectant, waiting air.

Making Football Safe for the Fair

"What can we play up at this time of year?" asked the manager of the department store drug shop.

"Well," said his assistant, "it is the football season, so how about hot-water bottles for boy friends to take along for their sweeties to sit on in those cold concrete stadiums?"—Sam Hill in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

After I had taken one bottle, I found I was getting results. I took about five bottles, and certainly was much better than I had been in some time, as my headaches had stopped. Cardui had done me more good than any medicine I had taken."

These days are trying. There's no denying. About our pains. But birds are winging. The sky and singing. And laughter's ringing. While faith remains. Little is altered. Though we have faltered. Let this be plattered. In merry strains. Though blows we'll carry. Such blows we'll carry. While faith remains. Our faith still strong is. We'll right what wrong is. Life's pathway long is. And winds and rains. May beat in our faces. But rich with graces. And sweet the place is. Where faith remains.

Cancer Cuts Life Average One Year

A Disease of Advanced Life, Resembling Heart Afflictions

NEW YORK.—In addition to its cost in suffering and money, cancer takes a toll of 1.12 years from the average length of life among white males, according to the mortality from this disease in the United States during 1930. This compares with a loss of 93.100 of a year in the average length of life in 1920. These figures are published by a local insurance company in a bulletin on "The Increasing Life Cost of Cancer."

The bulletin, reporting that the loss of average length of life from cancer among white females was 1.50 years in 1930, and 1.17 years in 1920, says: "While these figures are in each case higher than the corresponding figure for white males, the percentage of increase over the decade is somewhat less, namely 19 per cent, as compared with the 20 per cent noted in the case of white males."

Continuing, the bulletin says: "Cancer is typically a disease of advanced life, deaths therefrom being rare in children and young adults. In this respect it resembles heart disease and is quite distinct from tuberculosis." Comparing the loss of years of life from these three diseases—cancer, heart disease and tuberculosis—the study shows that, though great progress is being made in the war against tuberculosis, its ravages should not be measured by its mortality rate alone. Consideration should be given to the fact that tuberculosis claims its victims, for the most part, in their early years, thus cutting off many years of life, while cancer and heart disease, high as is the mortality from them, cut off as a rule only a relatively short period from the ultimate attainable span of life.
